

Grace Swanson leaves her donation from Mrs. Hardy, the honor of sitting at a table with seven boys, to Kate McDonald.

Harry leaves his brevity to Victor Scholin.

Edward Osterloh leaves his sunny smile, wholesome laugh, easy manner, and position as sergeant at arms, to any one who is able to assume it all.

Bertha relinquishes all claim on Freshmen boys.

Dora, Selma, Helga and Minnie leave their hospitality and reputation as royal entertainers to Ida and Pearl whom we know to be willing to spend their minutes of recreation in quiet recesses.

Elmer bequeaths his long reach, basketball suit, sore limbs, blue berry pie and his position as star player and captain to Elmer Latta.

Edward Johnson bequeaths his ability to ward off opponents and to shoot baskets and the privilege of being coaxed and petted to Charles Brown.

Lula Casselman bequeaths her latest invention, a foot light, to Ora, provided the patent is not transferred.

The boys cooking class leaves to the most hungry person the pleasure of masticating food prepared by them. Beware! of the pure food label, (and remember that hard and long cooking kills the bugs).

Hannah bequeaths her school bag, and the exercising walk from town in the morning to Amanda. She advises, however, that she take swimming lessons. They will be valuable when crossing on thin ice.

Elizabeth leaves her position as school musician to Miss Smith.

William Cumming bequeaths to William Thorkelson his able voice and debating ability.

Edward Rud leaves with Walter Lindquist his admonition in presenting speakers and conducting Sunday evening exercises.

Lenus bequeaths to Anchor Wurden his gameness to withstand the tumbles in basket ball games without complaining.

Jay leaves to Ed. Balstad his reputation as an entertainer and his dramatical dexterity.

Alfred leaves his noisy and boisterous disposition to Nels Palm.

Melvin leaves his most brilliant tie to Roy Hawley.

William Lindberg leaves his prominent place in the workshop to Almer Erickson.

Besides these specified donations, we leave to the institution our friendship, loyalty, and heartiest support.

All property not herein disposed off, such as startling information or knowledge gained by instructors from the various tests and examination papers, we leave to any individual who may be groping about blindly for light.

In testimony thereof: We have set our hand to this our last will and testament at Crookston this 3rd day of March 1912.

The foregoing instrument was signed by the Class of 1912 in our presence, and by them published and declared as and for their last will and testament and in their presence, and in the presence of each other, we hereunto subscribe our names as attesting witnesses, at the Northwest School of Agriculture, this third day of March, A. D. 1912.

Signed:

ALFRED DANIELSON,
CHARLES GRAVES.
