Department of Agriculture, University of Minnesota

TO THE CLASS OF 1913:

Northwest School of Agriculture, of the University of Minnesota.

One of the greatest problems which we have before us today is how to give and how to obtain honest and efficient service. Any man or group of men that uses an opportunity to take without giving a fair return, is an enemy of the common good. This applies to all individuals, all classes, all relations in life, and all methods of getting a living. The training that you have received should aid you in helping to solve this great problem. The future of the great Northwest will depend upon you more than upon any other members of the community because out of your labor and acres will come the bread to feed the hungry people and from your homes will come the boys and girls who will be the leaders in all kinds of the world's work. What greater opportunities for service can you ask? In using them honestly and efficiently, you will deserve and receive great honor and success.

Faithfully yours,

A. F. Woods,
