The day was an unusually happy day for all who are connected with the school and farm.

In the morning, students, faculty members and dining hall girls with the exception of those who went to church, were busy with preparations. Realizing that to carry out the spirit of the day no one should be overburdened with work, all were anxious to do their share and made the preparation easier with their merriment and laughter.

The tables were made to look inviting with attractive place cards and center pieces made from pumpkins loaded with fruit. Yellow chrysanthemums were also used in the decorations.

At half past one o'clock the happy company of nearly two hundred sat down to the feast. Among the guests were the Model School pupils and their parents. Priscillas and John Aldens, the most of them seniors, served the dinner and saw to it that all were carefully waited upon before "they spoke for themselves."
