

Athletics

Athletics at the Northwest School during the year of 1914-15 were along the same lines as in previous years, basket ball being the chief and important sport. The gymnasium classes were in charge of Martinus Stenseth, who came here with previous training in a physical culture school. His method of conducting class exercises and various setting up drills has been of great value to the boys in keeping them in fit physical condition. This work was given to all three classes, Senior, Junior and Freshmen.

The girls' physical culture class was in charge of Miss Grace Gunderson, and consists of drills and various exercises tending to improve their carriage and general physical condition.

Basket ball, the most interesting form of athletics at the school, again had its large following of students and created a never ending source of amusement and excitement. The gymnasium was kept in constant use by the various class teams, and practice began early in the fall. At the beginning of the season it looked as though the Seniors had a "cinch" on the chances for class championship, but constant and hard practice by the Juniors and Freshmen teams soon put the three in one class, and it was a hard fight for each game. The championship series was completed on March 6 when the Juniors won the championship from the other classes by defeating the Seniors by a score of 22-17. The final result last year was a victory by the Seniors over the Freshmen in the deciding game, giving the Seniors the pennant.

Due to the fact that the annual is being published earlier than is customary, it is impossible to include the annual indoor track meet. This meet will be held some time in March, and is anxiously awaited by the three classes.
