

Fisherman's Luck.

T. R. SEWALL

Farm Engineering

This book is one which diffuses knowledge and pleasure wherein it is read. The central figure expends so much of his energy transforming motor phenomena to student knowledge that he must occasionally go on a fishing or hunting excursion. Thoroughly conscientious, this boyish young man endears himself to the hearts of all readers.

"I'll ask you that in a test some day."

Proof of the Pudding.

MRS. T. R. SEWALL

Home Economics

This book has been in the A. C. library for many years. The heroine possesses a womanliness which is straightforward and direct as well as dignified, free from affectation and artificiality.

"Well, what do we know today?"

The Master of Destiny.

J. P. BENGTON

Academic Subjects

One of the most interesting books in our library. The hero of the book exerts his mastery over men not by reason of position but by his personality. He is large in mind, but larger still in heart. His friendship is extended to all. His words and acts show him a master in his profession.

"I wish I could tell you boys so you'd see it as I do."
