

April 16. At Yakima, Eldred Lindahl was busily engaged in transplanting apple trees.

April 20. Montana. Joseph Johnson and Gullingsrud, proprietors of the "Circle O" ranch.

April 30. In Bismarck, George Norquist was cashier of Farmers' State Bank. In an approaching parade we saw the ensign: "Logan for Governor."

May 1. En route to Minneapolis, Egon Nelson was conductor and Reske was at the throttle.

May 2. We registered at the West Hotel, George Jorgenson, proprietor. In the evening, at the Shubert, Charlotte Stennes played the star part of "Margie," and Jay Moses sang the latest hits.

May 3. Sunday, we listened to an eloquent sermon by Rev. Ferguson. He told us Hallstrom, a live stock commission man, was an active pillar in his church and that Esther Landby was training to become a domestic science teacher at the "U".

May 5. Milton Marmorine, proprietor of the "Dew Drop Inn," lived at Red Wing. Swedin, meat merchant, and Sather & Son, were found later. Mabel Vesledahl was visited at her school.

May 7. La Crosse. Laura Kjallberg, department store manager, was visited. She was selling a charmeuse dress to Mrs. K. Monson, who told us Kenneth had been appointed judge. While opening our mail we found an announcement of the marriage of Marie Larson to a wealthy citizen living near Pelican Rapids. In the Des Moines Courier, published by John Kappes, we found the ad: "Grow 'Em Big Hog Farm. Owner, H. Melick."

May 8. At Chicago, the White Sox easily walked away with the pennant, with the whirlwind shortstop, Gibbons, and first baseman, Forder, in the game. Victor Norquist, reporter for the Chicago Journal, was next seen, hurrahing for the "Sox." Edith Shosten and Alma Lindgren, milliners, made a fortune in Chicago, we were told.

May 12. Enroute to New York, we stopped to see Marie Austin at her summer resort, Hotel Ashtabula, on Lake Erie.

May 16. In New York, John Landby, jeweler, and Wilbur Johnston, Wall street broker, were both prosperous.

May 18. On board S. S. Claros, with Ole Negaard, captain, and Nobel Olson, life guard. Bursheim, U. S. ambassador to Italy, was also on board.

May 20. Bordeaux Y. W. C. A. Here we found Sophie Krbecek in charge. Loring Wheeler was also located there.

May 30. In London, England, we found Bena Flikke studying landscape planning. Earl Jensen had been there a few days before, buying Guernseys at the World's Fair.

Homeward bound is a sweet sound"—this we found very true. We returned to our respective homes, where the former resumed the writing of the novel, "Pussy Willow," and the latter took over his farm at Eldred, raising certified seed potatoes and registered Holsteins.

CLARA GILBERTSON and AMOS KASBERG.
