Our Life's Course

Lives of Seniors all remind us
We can reach the heights sublime,
And in classrooms leave behind us
Those red A's that brightly shine.

Not all pleasure, not all sorrow,
Is our path of earthly toil,
May we feel, that each to-morrow
Finds us still a mortal coil.

They are real; they are earnest;
And this height is not their goal;
They are pressing ever onward
With their body, mind and soul.

We must meet with joy and sorrow,
Rainy days and clouded skies,
Each to-day will die to-morrow,
As upward to the goal we rise.

Friends and friendships closely bind us;
Loved and loving, yours and mine,
May the future years still find us
Cherished by the hands of time.
