

Junior-Senior Banquet

THE Junior-Senior banquet was a novelty of the year's activities. The dining hall was transformed for one night into a theater where a Passing Show depicted in hilarious burlesque the events of the school term.

The tables were arranged in aisled semi-circles facing a stage. The guests were ushered into a darkened room lighted only by candles. The room was decorated in harmony with the class colors, maroon and white, and the general theme of the theater. Maroon and white-faced clowns were made from "all day suckers" wearing a harlequin costume and served as individual favors at the plate of each guest.

After an enjoyable dinner, the Passing Show was staged in lieu of the customary after-dinner speeches. A translucent curtain drawn across the stage and lighted from behind revealed shadow pictures of various scenes familiar to the students and acted by Juniors with enthusiastic realism. In front of the curtain some five or six members of both classes spoke vivid descriptions of the events burlesqued behind.

One event which rang true and shook the house with laughter was the reduction to the absurd of that far from comical experience — tonsil operation. In words that only one who has passed through this ordeal could find, Joe Skatvold visualized the agonies and the comedies of this terrifying experience. Operators behind the curtain had ransacked the motors shop for tools necessary to such an occasion and what they lacked in surgical skill they made up in theatrical zeal.

Elvera Applequist again convulsed the house with her narrative entitled "Sunday Night at Robertson Hall" which was ably enacted behind the curtain with skill only attained through experience.

Space is not sufficient to fully relate the details of the program. Suffice it to say that each scene and story brought an interested response from the audience. Karroll Gandrud and his actors portrayed scenes at the Winter Shows and Einar Loven and company demonstrated methods of fixing President Neske's Ford in the motors laboratory.

Between acts several musical numbers were rendered by the Junior girls, the Haymakers trio, Senior Boys' octette, and a saxophone quartette. Harold Walters, president of the Junior class opened the exercises with a welcome to the seniors and Theodore Neske, president, responded. Mr. Selvig closed the program with "The Review of Reviews."
