1932 FOOTBALL REVIEW

A wooden but gayly spotted pig and a brown jug whose "spirits" have long since departed, may mean but little to the visitors at the Northwest School, but to the students and the "Aggie" football team, the pig and jug mean victories and championship in the Agricultural School Conference.

It was apparent at the beginning of the football season that the "Aggie" squad had power, speed, and determination, but was lacking in the polish necessary to make their plays function properly. The major objective of the season was to win the Agricultural School Championship.

The football strategist premier, of the Agricultural School Conference, R. J. Christgau, broke all precedents in the selection of games as primers for the Agricultural School games. The usual procedure for the coach to follow is to select soft, easy teams for fillers between conference games, but Coach Christgau, knowing his men, selected instead, teams made up of high school and college stars, such as North Dakota University Freshmen, Concordia Freshmen, and Bemidji Teachers' College.

The non-conference games ended in defeats on the scoreboards, yet the battles were on more even terms than the scores indicated. The hard grilling contests with the university and college teams gave the Aggies the confidence and polish essential for winning the conference games.

The 1932 Aggies impressed every one who saw them, with their power, versatility, and well balanced team work. The team of 1933 will miss the veterans of this year's squad, but with Captain-elect Llewellyn Reese, a few lettermen around which to build, and the present coaching staff, great things can be expected again next year.
