From the early days of this year's school term, ten men were quietly missing from the usual groups of student time-spenders between 8 and 10 o'clock on Mondays and between 6:30 and 8 o'clock on Thursday nights. Anyone who took the trouble to inquire from the proper authority would have learned that they were assigned to the direction of Mr. O. M. Kiser during those hours. In other words, while the rest of the school was yelling at the top of its lungs over the football season, or yelling—if not at the top of its lungs—in the interests of debate, these men were quietly and conscientiously preparing themselves to win high honors in the stock judging contests at Winter Shows in December, in competition with six teams from agricultural schools representing Minnesota, North and South Dakota.

Mr. Kiser, through clever strategy, or in the interests of necromancy, or perhaps just through coincidence of ability, picked a "W-I-N" team—a Welshman (Lewellyn Reese), an Irishman (Harold Clow) and a Norwegian (Dayton Hanson). Besides winning the new silver loving cup, the three-man team also won high individual ranking in the horse, hog, sheep and beef classes.

Lewellyn Reese was the high man of the entire contest with a score of 858 out of a possible 1000.

Members of the original squad of ten who will return to school next year are determined to uphold the achievements of this year's team.

Editor's note: That last (Norwegian) is a particularly rare species on the campus. Mr. Kiser had difficulty finding one.
