

A school has leaders among its students in every field of curricular endeavor.

Throughout the school year, the leaders in athletics are enthusiastically acknowledged for their prowess by the students. They are cheered; they are toasted; they are banqueted; they are lettered.

Likewise the less glamorous school leaders in the fields of debate, livestock and crops judging are hailed before the assembly and awarded gold medals for their achievements.

All of these protectors of our school's honor and glory are photographed once collectively; the athletes—perhaps because of their more athletic and therefore photographable physiques—being taken both collectively and individually.

All this while others of our students are quietly distinguishing themselves as scholars, as musicians, as home project winners. When amidst all the rest we have time to think about it, we realize that these students are peers without doubt of all the others.

In recognition of their worthy contributions to our school life, the editors of the Aggie therefore present this humble hall of fame.
