Captain Morris Dahl—Center. He successfully led his team-mates through a difficult twenty-game schedule. He proved to be an ideal captain. As a ball handler, as a scoring threat, and as a defensive performer Dahl established a great record.

Melvin Brastad—Reserve. Not only his clever ball handling and his smooth playing but also his competitive spirit contributed to the successful season. Another year of service is ahead.

Woodrow Evans—Guard. His second season as a regular. His fighting spirit, his shiftiness on the basketball court, and his determination to win, made him a great asset to the Aggie team.

Loyal Harris—Reserve. With one more season ahead he promises to be a valuable member of the next basketball edition of the Aggies. A good ball-handler, a dandy scoring threat.

Clayton Isaacson—Reserve. His height and his ability to break loose and be a scoring threat were assets to the Aggies. His desire to win was a factor in the team's success. One more year of service.

Ivan Torfin—Forward. A clever floor-man. He broke up the defense and gained control of the ball to break up the opposition plays. Also a dandy offensive man. One more year of service ahead.

James Lenes—Forward. A clever ball handler and a speed merchant down the basketball court. His quick pivots and shiftiness were great factors in the team's success. One more year of service ahead.

Lowell Lindberg—Reserve. A dandy defensive man. His team spirit aided the Aggies throughout the schedule. This was Lowell's first year on the team. He proved to be very popular with his teammates.

Roger Panzer—Guard. The fastest and best ball handler on the team. He was handicapped by injuries but his spectacular field goals contributed immensely to the Aggie victories.

Curtis Riel—Reserve. A speed merchant. He was a scoring threat whenever in the game. His clever floor work and his determination to win were decided assets. Two more years of service ahead.

Robert Sunderland—Reserve. His height was of great advantage to the team. His alertness and willingness aided the Aggies in their difficult schedule. This was Bob's first year on the team.

Donald LaPlante—Guard. His knack of getting out of tight spots and going down the floor pulled his team out of many difficult situations. His long shots worried the opposition. Two years of service ahead.
