

Walter C. Coffey

Dean and Director

of the College of Agriculture and Experiment Station

of the

University of Minnesota

CONGRATULATIONS

from Dean Coffey

A LOT is being said about our tremendous capacity to produce those things which satisfy hunger, keep us comfortably clothed and housed, and provide other human needs and satisfactions. Also a lot is being said about maladjustments which deprive multiplied thousands of these material comforts and needs. Many discussions center in what should be done to overcome these maladjustments, but as yet none are wholly clear and definite. Even so, the discussions may be worth while for only by thinking, discussing and trying will the possibilities of our comparatively new found ability to produce be realized. If and when that glorious time comes I suspect that practically everyone will be busy putting in normal and reasonable working hours given over to mental and manual activities.

I wish heartily to congratulate you over the fact that you have been through a training at the Northwest School which stresses the importance of diligent application of hand and mind to the every day tasks of life.