

1940 ADVANCED DAY

PICTURES: (top center) Our miniature speech choir—perfect timing, ain't it?; (second row, left) Our King, Si Strand; our Queen, Katherine Ann Viker; (second row, center) The master of ceremonies, Frank Evans; (second row, right) Underclassmen are awed as the dignified Advanced march down the aisle; (third row, left) More dignified Advanced—such military precision; (third row, right) "All Hail the Advanced Class"; (bottom row) We got excused from Geometry, and did we have ice cream at the expense of the instructor!

Advanced Class Day is the first of a series bringing an end not only to the school careers of the proud fourth year students, but to the year. Advanced Class Day was observed in 1940 on March 19 and besides taking over the regular school assembly on that day the graduates also took over the various classes. In English Literature the discussions and recitations pertained to everything but good usage of the language and the reading of good things. In Geometry the wise old instructor knew what he was in for so "To-day I have the unusual privilege of excusing you from this period." And so it went—the Advanced had a good time for their Northwest School careers were practically at an end.
