

C. H. BAILEY
Dean of the College of Agriculture

Class of 1942

You will soon be passing from an environment of peace and tranquillity to an environment in your home community electrified by war. We had hoped in 1918 that your and future generations would never have to experience the horrors of war. You have reached the age when you no longer need to be shielded from the grim realities of life. You have served your apprenticeship; you have qualified for service; you have won your stripes and we are sending you into the front lines in the battle for the preservation of our democratic way of life. While your training with us has fitted you for various tasks, yet you are all equipped to render first-aid whether it be on the firing line, assembly or food production line.

We trust that the spirit of the song, "Fight, Northwest Aggies," will carry you on to victory in all your worth while endeavors.

—T. M. McCall.

A Greeting to the Students of the Northwest School of Agriculture

It is my hope that your student days at the Northwest School of Agriculture have been and will continue to be profitable and happy ones, as students' days should be. No doubt they have been busy days, occasionally disappointing, perhaps, and then again, crowned with success and enjoyment. During the months that you have been privileged to spend at this school you have been in daily contact with competent and interested instructors. You have become acquainted with the experience of the past to equip you to deal with the problems of the future. You have opened the doors to the world's libraries and have enjoyed a glimpse of the great experiment stations and research laboratories. Thus you have made a closer acquaintance with nature, with whom you must work co-operatively and effectively to build and maintain the agriculture of the Northwest. You have been encouraged to appreciate the work and accomplishments of others, and to co-operatively bend your best efforts and abilities to the common good. So we have confidence that among you we will find those qualities of leadership and resourcefulness that will maintain your several communities at the high level of economic and social success which we hope you will all enjoy.

—C. H. Bailey.

T. M. McCALL
Superintendent of Northwest School and Station