

CROP JUDGING TEAM

Who are the boys who plug for the school without any band or cheering crowds on the side lines? Why, it's the crops judging team.

Here is a group of boys who spend many long hours preparing themselves for the inter-collegiate contest which is held during Winter Shows Week. They must learn to identify the common and noxious weeds, destructive plant diseases, cereals, grasses and legumes. They are also required to judge several classes of grains. The boys show a great deal of enthusiasm and much credit must be given to Mr. Dunham for his splendid coaching.

It is not only the fun of participating in this contest which makes this activity so worthwhile, but the stores of knowledge which are attained make it valuable in the future lives of these boys. Representing the Northwest School at the Winter Shows contest were William Vasilakes, Harry Christianson, and Gilbert Reese. The team placed second in the Agricultural School Conference.
