

SENIOR DAY

Senior Day began with a bang at four o'clock in the morning. Beds of lower classmen were tipped, and Stephens Hall was in an uproar. The seniors, dressed in sailor outfits, then took over the rest of the campus. They sang, yipped, and yelled to their heart's content.

The entire class marched into the assembly to "Anchors Aweigh". The key of knowledge was presented to Roger Simmons, the junior class president, by Irene Olson, the senior class president. The class will and class prophecy were read, and Vernon Hoppe, editor in chief of the Aggie, announced the dedicatee.

At lunch and dinner, the class had as their guests several members of the faculty. Darwin Ferrier acted as master of ceremonies. A dance was given in the Aggie Inn after dinner, and the seniors ended the day with many happy memories.

Upper left: Harold Aasland, Carlton Knutson, Donald Milner, Milton Madson, Dale Barry, Donald Erickson, Henry Hoff, Vernon Hoppe, Roland Morrison, Wilfred Wold. Upper right: Senior Class officers: Irene Olson, Darwin Ferrier, Alice Reitmeier, and Wilfred Wold lead their class into Senior Day assembly. Center: Editor-in-chief Vernon Hoppe presents the first 1942 "Aggie" to the dedicatee, Mr. Foker. Lower left: Senior Class seated at assembly. Lower right: Garnet Balstad, Lois Swanson, and Annabelle Jeffrey take a first look at "Aggie" while the other Seniors anxiously wait in line.

