Introducing the Aggie players to the student body, and frequently to a sport audience, the Northwest School Band plays an active part in campus life and gives parents and visitors a glimpse of what the Aggies can produce in the way of music.

Offered to students who show instrumental talent as a class with full credit rather than as an extra-curricular activity, the band holds its rehearsals twice weekly in the auditorium. For those who are just learning to play instruments, there is a beginning band, which provides incentive for the new recruits. These players, as soon as they are proficient enough, "graduate" into the "big" band.

Performances at football and basketball games are made in addition to several public performances on special occasions throughout the year.
