

Aggie Rouser

The "Aggie Rouser," edited by the Advanced Class in Journalism, is a compact manual of general information about the school. This humble sheet is probably the cause of more animosity and glee than any other publication of its kind. Business and pleasure are combined within its covers. Both student and faculty interviews are becoming a regular feature, taking their places with campus capers, athletics, and other school news.

All work for the "Rouser," such as reporting, typing, proofreading, and mimeographing, is done by the paper staff. The "Rouser" is published every two weeks, at which time the fruits of the staff's labors is shared by the whole school. Under the capable direction of Miss Larsen, the staff has managed, in spite of shortages and ill health, to keep up a steady flow of "Rousers."
