

Senior Day

The idea of March having passed without any dire consequences and the following day being a good one for the seniors of '44 to muster a lot of pep and enthusiasm, the great day finally came and came very early in the morning. While other students were still fast asleep, the wide-awake seniors began their observance of Senior Day on March 17 with a tractor-drawn hay-ride.

At 11:40 the honored class sponsored the traditional Senior Day assembly and attracted favorable attention with all its members uniformly clothed in a gay costume of dark shirts or trousers, white shirts, red, white and blue broad suspenders and jaunty little caps. At this time the Key of Knowledge was presented to John Lapp, junior class president, by Kenneth Price, senior class president. The class will and prophecy were read.

The dining hall was patriotically decorated with the class colors. The day's festivities were brought to a memorable close with a class revelry in the Aggie Inn.
