ADVISERS

To the class of 1946:

In spite of the high wages offered by employers during the war years and in spite of the dire need for farm workers, you attended school. Your parents were wise in their decision to keep you in school although your help was probably desperately needed on your own farms.

You will find that an education is an insurance—the best investment you could ever make. Your diploma is an insurance policy which will never expire; it will not, however, become more valuable as times goes on unless you are willing to retain what you have been taught in school and accumulate new, worthwhile knowledge as it comes to you in life.

You have chosen as your class motto a theme that has been used by philosophers and poets through the ages. That you consider your present and future to be of greater importance than the past indicates that you are willing to go forward and not slip backward or follow some pattern that someone else has designed. Have enough confidence in yourselves to make decisions and carry out those decisions to the best of your ability. You have been given opportunities in school to be self-reliant. Profit by the mistakes you have made and the victories you have won as you step into the ever changing but wonderful world that confronts you.
