

Local Color

A story must have good characters, good setting, good action. And it must have more—those touches of individuality that writers term local color. Bound up in it must be the little hints that let the reader know he is in a definite place. Herein is to be found a few of the things that make this story of the year belong exclusively to NWSA—colorful, personalized, unforgettable touches—the Northwest School.

