

To the Red River Aggie—and thereby to the staff and students of our Northwest School—cordial greetings:

The University of Minnesota is a far-flung enterprise, with members of its student-family constructively at work on seven separate campuses. Truly we serve the whole state—and the roots of our strength and purpose draw their nourishment from the needs and support of all the people of Minnesota.

The Regents and the University administration have great pride in the record of the Northwest School. They respect its leaders and staff. They have high regard for its splendid student body. With all good wishes,

F. L. Morrill,
President.

President, University of Minnesota

PRODUCERS

Located, as it is, in one of the most fertile areas of the world, the Northwest School of Agriculture serves that area in many useful ways. Its faculty and staff engage in teaching those practices which, by demonstration and experiments, have been tested and proven. Its students go forth to serve the region and the State as competent producers, homemakers, and citizens. This year book records the life of the school during the current period. It is of service to the community in depicting the structure and activities of the institution; it will become a precious possession of those whose relations to the school are here recorded.

C. H. Bailey

Dean and Director
Department of Agriculture
University of Minnesota

