

... and be smart homemakers

RETTA BEDE

VERNA STOKKE

A. MORLEY PILKEY

The Northwest School does not guarantee husbands for all its graduates, but it certainly is diligent in seeing that the girls who leave here can be good homemakers, if asked.

If we are not good cooks after three years of Miss Bede's cooking classes, it just isn't in us, that's all. Then in our senior year we put into practice all we have learned by living in Home Management for ten days.

Our new dining hall manager, Miss Marie Murphy, is responsible for the well planned and appetizing meals we devour here on the campus. Her quantity cookery class teaches the art of preparing good food in large quantities.

Freshmen math is the medium through which new students become acquainted with Mr. Pilkey. His poultry production classes, available to both boys and girls, are a constant source of valuable information on this subject.

In sewing and handicraft classes girls learn useful household arts under the guidance of Miss Stokke. In handicraft class we develop skills in knitting, crocheting, leather work, textile painting, and rug making. By our junior year we are able to make tailored dresses and suits.
