

practical knowledge

When hunters used to shoot ducks on the swamp which is now our campus, none of them realized that this land would be reclaimed some day. What started out as worthless swamp land has become the beautiful campus we all love.

It is fitting that our school was built on land which was thought to be worthless. In a way, that reclamation project has been multiplied over and over again.

Since we are of its humble beginnings, our school has always been an encouragement to us farm boys and girls. It has shown us that although our farms might seem poor and unprofitable, what we learn here will help us make something worthwhile out of the farms which we some day hope to own ourselves.