JOURNALISM

Grammar teaches us to write and speak correctly. Through the study of sentence structure and the parts of speech, we gradually gain control of our English language.

Literature is our passport to adventure in near and faraway places. In books the world lies before us. Literature invites us to explore the ways of men and become acquainted with the world's greatest minds. In books we meet the deeper realities of life.

Speech helps us to express before men the ideas of our mind in a convincing manner. It seeks to eliminate shaky knees and fear of self-vocal expression. It helps us grow up and develop qualities of leadership.

In journalism we study the techniques of news presentation. We learn how to write convincing and interesting articles without distorting the truth. It is the class in journalism that is responsible for the school paper, "The Rouser."

Richard Abney's only complaint: Too hard to concentrate on the subject matter.
