

Reading and Writing Are

Grammar is for the sake of writing and in English we learn writing from the ground up by applying all skills for the sake of building sentences. Even spelling is important, though we thought it was no longer necessary after grade school.

We learn to read as a matter of necessity and to our surprise, it becomes a source of pleasure. Through our classes, we are exposed to the different types of literature such as the essay, biography, novel, short story, plays and poems.

All students in English are interested in the projects that each class has. In the picture above we see a sample of what Mr. Heckman's English I class displays some of the projects that they have made in connection with their stories about dogs, pioneers and a variety of stories both from this country and others.
