History

What is history? Some scholars say that history is a study of the mutations or retrogressions of civilizations. By this, they mean that certain events have either altered or furthered the progress or achievements of man as he emerged from an uncivilized environment to one of culture.

Others say that the word, history, can be separated into two words. The example of this is His-story. By separating the world and capitalizing the first letter, they are making reference to God, and they say that history is God's story of his people--the progress they make and the destruction they bring about to themselves. Whatever interpretation we may like to accept, it is certain that history provides for us the mistakes and high ideals of every civilization. It is the responsibility of every student to study carefully, so that by reading of the mistakes of others, we should be better equipped to meet the challenges that may lie ahead in our future, and be more understanding about that which is past.

Geography

Though it is a relatively new subject on our campus, geography has rapidly become a most interesting and enlightening subject, as Mr. Bergquist guides students' endeavors to learn all about the world in which we live.
