

There was a lot of talk about all the artistic snow sculpture that was to decorate the campus, but only four groups put their words into action: the Vets Club, McCall Hall, Ramberg House and the FFA Agricore. The veterans took first place with their famous red cardinal (pictured above), a bird that was beheaded by the infamous sometime Friday night, to the sorrow of all except the axemen. The Vets Club also won the honor of selling all the Snow Days buttons that had been ordered to finance the festivities. A few willing helpers from the Menzhuber ranks provided the students with a skating rink for the gala weekend.

Steve Josephson's hefty swing with the broom still didn't win the game for the students' team, who were clobbered by the faculty for the second year in a row. Below: The dance was great. Scores of couples gyrated to the swingin' beat of the band or gazed dreamily at the snowflakes and balloons that decorated the ceiling. In the foreground are Linda and Roger Fischer. Left: the Torchlight Parade.
