

Ecumenical Movement Develops on Campus

Left: Clergy keep office hours in Selvig for student counseling. Above: Four members of the UCM committee: Messrs. Johnson, Gilbertson, Kelly, and Worthington. Messrs. Oelschlager, Waller, and Dayton ate together at a UCM meeting.

Working together to perform more effective service to college students, the Crookston clergy have united this year in a cooperative campus ministry. The program is headed by a committee of four clergy and three laymen and also includes two faculty members, Dale Knotek and Dr. George Marx. Known as the University Christian Movement, the organization is national in scope. Their dinner meetings have included films, speakers, and dialogues devoted to religious and social problems of today.

AT UCM this segregated group (no girls allowed) chose a table to themselves. Seated are Lancot, Lofgren, Matthies, Christen, Conway, Martodam, Dretsch, and Suedkamp. Standing: Bucholz, Bierschbach, Father Kelly, the Rev. Paul Gilbertson, E. Normandin, R. Normandin, Krupa, and Beutz.
