

Stanley D. Sahlstrom, PhD
Director

Inside people:

People wanting to know why? how? when? where? Who has the answers? These men, of course. Enthusiasm and friendliness characterize each one. Through their cooperation and hard work, the University of Minnesota Technical Institute is dynamic and growing, and developing a reputation for quality education in the collegiate technical field.

The school offers a variety of programs in agriculture, business, and food service management, all undergirded by a strong academic course of study. There are extra-curricular activities to please every interest, and many cultural offerings spice the year's entertainment.

Four division chairmen and thirty-four classroom instructors teach full or part time. There are two counselors and four head athletic coaches, besides a placement director and a learning resources supervisor.

The college's most distinguished visitor this year was Dr. Malcolm Moos, president of the University of Minnesota, who made his first trip to the campus February 28. With his quick wit, personal charm, and quiet composure, he captivated both students and faculty. In the picture to the right he is shown with Dr. Sahlstrom, with whom he conferred about mutual University problems. Everyone on campus is anticipating a return visit.

