Sophs Are Solemn About The Future

Tech students move in a small, quiet world which seems comparatively untouched by the turmoil, unrest, and ferment of the rest of the country and the world. Days follow days peacefully, and on the surface the majority seem undisturbed by contending ideologies and the clank of steel. Yet inwardly most campus young people think seriously about what is affecting their lives, and though they may appear to be living in their own private academic and technical world, they are really focusing on the future and wondering what their roles can be in a troubled society with changing values and chasms in communication.
